

ALL THINGS RELEVANT
MARKETING & MEDIA

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Christopher J. Smith Shares “My Fatal First Date” Survivor Story

Faith-based motivational platform centers resilience, rehabilitation, and purpose after a life-changing act of domestic violence. “Heaven Is Real”

Fort Worth, TX.— [RELEASE DATE] — Christopher J. Smith, a 50-something-year-old contractor from rural Illinois, faith-based motivational speaker, author, and survivor, is sharing “My Fatal First Date,” a true story of a second chance and a life reclaimed. Presented by Shirl A. P. Solomon, CEO/Founder of All Things Relevant Marketing & Media, the platform centers Smith’s survival, recovery, faith, and purpose-driven commitment to encouraging others through adversity, rehabilitation, and trauma.

Smith was shot in the head while on a first date with a woman he met online. The woman was murdered, and both were shot by her ex-boyfriend, who was stalking her. Smith’s story is shared with care and focuses on survival, recovery, and the long process of rebuilding a life after domestic violence.

Smith recounts that, while in a medically induced coma, he connected with the power of God. His recovery and faith now guide him toward a purpose-driven life and a commitment to spreading the Gospel of Jesus Christ. His message emphasizes the role of faith, prayer, resilience, and the power of the human spirit in moving through hardship toward hope, healing, and purpose.

His first-person account also includes practical and personal lessons from rehabilitation. Smith shares strategies for overcoming anger and speaks about how gardening and his faithful dog, Tiki, became important parts of his healing. These experiences help frame the story not only as an account of survival, but also as an invitation to consider how support, discipline, faith, and meaningful routines can contribute to recovery.

“The power of the human spirit is unstoppable—and that power exists within us all.” said Christopher J. Smith, faith-based motivational speaker, author, and survivor, and Christ-follower. The statement reflects the central message of his platform: that people facing adversity can pursue healing and renewed purpose while drawing on faith, prayer, community, inner resilience, and more importantly is that “Heaven Is Real”.

The proposed outreach is designed for audiences and potential partners that engage with recovery, faith, education, and personal transformation. These include churches, rehabilitation centers, sports platforms, schools, trauma recovery centers and agencies, and survivor-centered platforms. Through speaking engagements, workshops, media opportunities, and related programming, Smith is positioned to share a survivor-centered message with people seeking encouragement and practical perspective.

The broader platform also positions Smith for potential book sales, coaching or mentoring, partnerships, and the development of a faith-centered community focused on encouragement and transformation. These opportunities represent promotional positioning within the proposal and are not announcements of confirmed engagements, partnerships, sales results, or publication details.